

Tremors shake Ionian Island

ATHENS (R) — Two strong earth tremors shook the Ionian island of Kefallinia and towns and villages on the western Peloponnese Saturday causing panic but no casualties or damage, police said. The first tremor struck at 1255 GMT and measured 5.2 points on the open-ended Richter scale. The second, measuring five, was recorded at 1602 GMT, the Athens Observatory said. The epicentre of the quakes was about 40 kilometres north west of Kefallinia. The observatory said the tremors were after-shocks of a strong earthquake last Monday in the same area which measured 6.5 points on the Richter scale and caused damage to houses in several villages along the coast of the western Peloponnese.

Syria: Lebanon should reject bases

DAMASCUS (R) — Syrian state radio said Saturday Lebanon should uphold its independence without foreign help and reject Israeli or American bases on its soil. The radio was commenting on Israel's demand to be allowed to keep Israeli-occupied early warning stations in southern Lebanon after its troops leave. Lebanon rejected the demand at the latest session of talks with Israeli and U.S. negotiators on an Israeli troop pullout. The Americans were reported to have proposed a compromise under which the warning posts would be manned by U.S. personnel. But Syrian Radio said: "Lebanon should be the master of its territory, water and air without assistance from anybody and without Israeli or American bases." The Lebanese had a sacred national duty to force the Israelis from their territory, the radio said. Damascus has frequently criticised the four-week-old negotiations, indicating that it feared Lebanon might be forced to make concessions to Israel which would take it out of the community of Arab nations.

Qadhafi was reported as saying during talks with Romanian President Nicolae Ceausescu which opened in Bucharest Friday. President Ceausescu reiterated his view that a lasting peace in the Middle East depended on the existence of an independent Palestinian state and also recognition of the existence of the state of Israel, the agency reported. He also condemned Israel for aggression in Lebanon and called for its withdrawal from that country, it said.

Queen inaugurates project to better village greenery

MADABA (Petra) — Her Majesty Queen Noor Saturday attended a special ceremony at Umm Al Basatin town in Madaba District and inaugurated a project for making the countryside green and to develop Jordanian villages.

The Queen, accompanied by Minister of Social Development Ibrahim Al-Nufli, took part in planting fruit-bearing and forest trees in the town's school for boys. She later visited a number of village houses and met with villagers and their families. She also helped children plant trees around their homes.

Queen Noor also visited the town's rural women society, the girls preparatory school, and the youth club. She was briefed on the organisations' activities and the social conditions of the village's families.

Mrs. Mufti made a speech on the occasion underlining the importance for all citizens to take part in developing their local communities.

The Social Development Ministry is undertaking a project for making Jordanian villages green and encouraging parents and children alike to take part in planting trees in their gardens and their fields. Mrs. Mufti said.

She said that the ministry will organise a competition for families who plant trees in the coming year and will present prizes for those excelling in their work.

The project for making the countryside green is undertaken by the Ministry of Social Development in cooperation with the ministries of agriculture and municipal and rural affairs and the environment.

In the course of implementing the project the Agriculture Department in Madaba has this year distributed 4,000 tree saplings to Umm Al Basatin residents to be planted in their region, a department spokesman said.

According to the spokesman, the project also entails the building of livestock enclosures, offering financial and in-kind assistance to families to raise their standard of living and adult education classes. The spokesman said that a special 25-member council has been set up to follow up the implementation of the project.

Attending Saturday's ceremony at Umm Al Basatin were the Madaba District governor, directors of government departments in the district and the town's residents.

The new prices of coffee will be in effect as of Jan. 25, 1983. The second order fixes the wholesale price of a tonne of red lentils at JD 200 and the retail price at 220 fils per kilogramme.

This order is to come into force on Jan. 26, 1983. The third order fixes the price of damel at JD 35 per tonne bought from flour mills and the new price will be enforced from Jan. 23, 1983.

A statement issued by the minister's office said that prices of the above mentioned commodities have been reduced due to a drop in their world prices, and, expressed hope for a drop in world inflation in 1983.

According to the statement, the price of a tonne of lentils has been thus reduced by JD 20 per tonne. As to the prices of coffee, the reduction is of 60 fils for each 250 grammes.

U.S. journalist stresses Jordan's role in Mideast peace efforts

By Affiah A. Kaloti
Special to the Jordan Times

AMMAN — Jordan has a central role in bringing about peace in the Middle East, a political commentator on Middle Eastern affairs for the New York Review said Saturday.

Bernard Avishai, who is also a professor of humanities at Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT), told the Jordan Times that Jordan would have to play a major role in any effort aimed at establishing a lasting peace in the Middle East.

Prof. Avishai, who left Amman Saturday after a four-day visit, said that his visit was at the invitation of the Ministry of Information "with the aim of clarifying the image what a just peace looks like."

After meeting with senior Jordanian officials, Prof. Avishai said he was "deeply impressed by the country's keen desire for peace."

There is a strong conviction, he said, that the time is ripe for a concentrated move towards peace.

Prof. Avishai said that the Israeli invasion of Lebanon and the denunciation it caused in the U.S., war weariness among the Israeli public "not properly voiced by the government," and the Gulf war have added to "this sense of urgency" for peace.

During his visit to the Israeli occupied Arab territories earlier this month, Prof. Avishai said he noticed "the extreme desire of Palestinians to get rid of the Israeli occupation and a strong support for the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO), as their sole representative."

The Palestinians in the West Bank also "feel it is the appropriate time for a reassertion of the PLO leadership whose policy now conforms to that of King Hussein."

"I have never encountered such a clear and open determination and feel optimistic that peace can be achieved," Prof. Avishai said.

Freddie Laker returns to holiday business

By Eric Hall
Reuter

LONDON — Sir Freddie Laker, one-time pioneer of cut-price transatlantic flights whose former company folded in one of the biggest crashes in British corporate history, is taking off again with a new venture.

Last February, his Laker Airways collapsed with debts of over £260 million ($400 million).

Now, the 60-year-old former teaboy is once more smiling out from British television sets advertising package tours to Europe and the Caribbean and soon to Florida and the U.S. west coast.

With the backing of his friend, millionaire Roland "tiny" Rowland, chief of the multinational conglomerate Lorrho, he has formed a new company, Skytrain Holidays.

The television advertisement shows Sir Freddie saying: "Hello, this Skytrain brochure says I'm back in the holiday business with resorts, hotels and airlines I've picked myself, plus complete protection for your money."

Despite the objections of travel agents, the British Civil Aviation Authority (CAA) granted Skytrain an air travel organisers' licence last November.

Eyebrows have been raised that the man whose company cost an estimated 17,000 holidaymakers £4 million ($6.3 million) when its demise stranded them abroad is jumping into the travel world again so soon.

The Association of British Travel Agents (ABTA) has objected strongly to Sir Freddie being given a new licence to operate and has refused to grant Skytrain membership of its organisation.

"I am astonished that the CAA should even consider giving him a licence," ABTA President Ivor Helms said at the time.

Recent press reports here have shown that many travellers who lost money when Laker collapsed agree with this sentiment and the folk hero image is looking shaky. ABTA rejected Skytrain's membership on the grounds that it did not comply with an ABTA rule barring a company with a controlling director of a business that failed to meet its liabilities.

But Sir Freddie hopes to get round the problem by selling direct to the public and through non-ABTA agents.

He is also offering half-price holidays to those who lost money in his other venture. "I swore that when I returned to the travel business, no future client of Freddie Laker would ever again suffer financial loss for any reason," he said.

One of CAA's conditions of licence was payment of over a million sterling ($1.6 million) bond to insure customers.

Sir Freddie sparked off a cut-throat price war when he introduced his Laker Airways transatlantic budget fares in 1977.

Despite falling passenger levels as the recession that followed the oil crisis of 1979-80 began to take hold and limit the money people had to spend, he borrowed almost £200 million ($300 million) in 1981 to buy five new DC-10 aircraft and three Airbuses.

On the London to New York, Miami, Los Angeles and San Francisco routes the major carriers complained that they were losing a million sterling ($1.6 million) a day mainly because they had slashed their fares to compete with Laker.

Many state-subsidised airlines went into the red under the impact of the recession and rising fuel bills. Laker, with only the backing of increasingly reluctant bankers, went bust.

Last November, liquidator Christopher Morris filed a suit for over a billion dollars against the world's major airlines alleging they conspired to force Laker Airways out of business.

The suit includes PanAm, Trans World, British Airways, Lufthansa, Swissair and British Caledonian along with plane-builders McDonnell Douglas and McDonnell Douglas Finance, which provided Laker with money.

Mr. Morris said the airlines dropped prices to a level where they were not making a profit and Laker was forced out. The airlines have denied the charges.

Mr. Morris's colleague Malcolm Filmore, both of London accountants Touche Ross, said "what surprises me is the hatred which other people in the airline business had, and still have for Laker. It will be a grisly story when it all comes out."

Sir Freddie became something of a folk hero for his fight against the International Air Transport Association's (IATA) fixed-price cartel and once said "if I go down in history, I would like it to be for the total destruction of IATA."

Regardless of what the future holds for his new company, Sir Freddie, the man who once called British trade department officials "hums and gangsters", will undoubtedly be remembered as something of an enigma.

He became a symbol of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's search for the entrepreneurial spirit, could service a plane and fly it too.

Abrupt end of a press honeymoon

By Simon Alterman
Reuter

MEXICO CITY — President Miguel de la Madrid's honeymoon with the Mexican press has been brought to an abrupt end by his proposal to tighten the country's antiquated libel law.

The new president took office last month to a rapturous reception from Mexican newspapers which, almost without exception, went on to report favourably his tough measures to tackle the country's economic crisis.

Ironically, the president's decision to tighten the libel law is part of his much-vaunted campaign for "moral renovation" widely acclaimed by the press as an important step towards restoring confidence in Mexico's notoriously corrupt public administration.

The new law, passed by Congress last week, aroused the unanimous opposition of the press, which foreigners generally regard as tame. Columnists denounced what they called the "gag law," and many newspapers published blank cartoons portraying the empty spaces traditionally used in some countries to show that a censor has been at work.

"The reaction of the press was a little bit exaggerated," presidential press chief Manuel Alonso told Reuters. "It went far beyond our expectations."

The government says the new law is necessary to prevent the "yellow journalism" which occasionally surfaces in some sections of the press concerned less with facts than with boosting circulation.

But Mr. Alonso said it had not been prompted by any specific incidents and was not aimed at individual publications. "It is part of the general moral renovation which the Mexican people demanded of candidate de la Madrid during his election campaign," he said.

Journalists, who now face the prospect of fighting costly legal actions on relatively low salaries if someone decides an article has caused "moral damage," are not convinced of the purity of the government's intentions.

They also fear that the wording of the bill, which defines moral damage as harm to a person's "feelings, affections, beliefs, decorum, honour, reputation, secrets of his private life and physical integrity or his personal consideration," defies consistent application in the courts.

Many journalists feel that a congressional amendment, reaffirming the rights of free speech guaranteed by the constitution, has only added to the confusion.

"The basic aim is healthy, because a large part of the press is irresponsible," said Miguel Angel Granados Chapa, a senior editor of the left-leaning daily Uno Mas Uno.

"But I don't think the president chose the best method. There already are penalties in the law," he added.

The press law, passed early this century, allows the government to bring prosecutions for libel but has in fact been used sparingly.

Deposit for peace

IN REPORTING foreign policy accomplishments to date of the Reagan presidency, the White House on Thursday listed the U.S. president's initiative on the Middle East as a move that "has brought new life to the broader Arab-Israeli peace process". A year or so from now, when the campaign for U.S. elections will be in full swing, Mr. Reagan may well be able to claim yet more credit for his Sept. 1 initiative. In theory at least, the greatest progress will have been made by Jordan and the Palestinians joining Americans and Israelis in talks on a comprehensive Middle East settlement.

What happens after such a scenario materialises is open to speculation. The Americans now say peace — not political gains for this or that country or individual — is what they want; and bringing peace to this troubled area would be their greatest genuine accomplishment. The Arabs are ready for peace and so seems the Israeli people, but there is a great deal to be done before any real progress can be achieved towards solving their conflict.

It cannot be wrong to have faith in all desires for peace, whether held by Americans, Arabs or Israelis. What is unclear, almost mysterious, at this stage though is the pragmatic approach that is being pursued to settle the Palestine problem once and for all.

Most probably, President Reagan and his administration are serious about remaining committed to their initiative, well into the elections campaign if necessary. Furthermore, there is no reason to believe that that commitment will prove a liability to them, before the presidential elections or otherwise. But there is always the question of how much results can be achieved in good time, especially when past experiences show that successive American policies in particular have never for long steered course.

Still, if there is to be peace, all will have to pay their shares for it. We know we Arabs have been made and are prepared to pay a price, if only to offer everybody else a fair deal. It so happens that, through the pragmatic American approach to the problem, we are also asked to pay first, a non-refundable deposit if you like, and would do it for a promise of reciprocating from the other side. It may sound unfair, but war is the alternative.

Al Ra'i: Israeli repression increases as U.S. looks on

The orders issued by the Israeli chief-of-staff are part of an integral Israeli programme to repress the Palestinian people in the occupied Arab territories, and to force them out of their country. Thus it is hoped that this will pave the way for the Israeli settlement policy to carry on unimpeded.

The orders seek to apply collective punishment, especially through the use of economic pressure, against Palestinian families whose relatives are wanted by the occupying power. They also call for the establishment of concentration camps in the occupied territories, and the deportation of as many people as possible out of the West Bank and Gaza. The regulations are also aimed at arming Israeli settlers, and encouraging them to organise regular assaults against the Palestinian people.

Such aggressive practices illustrate the great hardship and difficulties the people of the occupied territories are having to undergo. However, they also act as a spur to the Arab effort at the international level which is trying to thwart these practices. Even more so than before, purely rhetorical towards expressing solidarity, as articulated by some Arabs, no longer suffice.

The international community, and the U.S. administration in particular, must bear political, moral and human responsibilities for such a situation. For on countless occasions they have been called upon to put an end to the Nazi methods being adopted by the Israeli authorities towards the Palestinians in the occupied territories. It is simply illogical that those who call for peace in the Middle East should be willing to permit Israel to apply repressive measures, and not interfere to end the sufferings of the Palestinians.

Genuine advancement towards peace requires the creation of an atmosphere conducive to peace. Such an atmosphere must and does extend to the occupied territories. The international community, and the U.S. administration in particular, can not consider what is happening in the occupied territories an issue of minor importance. For the peace process to advance it is undoubtedly a top priority.

Al Dustour: Hussein's tour aims to unify Arab policy

His Majesty King Hussein Saturday resumed his Arab tour with visits to Kuwait, Qatar, Bahrain and Oman. The present tour aims at coordinating the actions of Arab heads of state, especially with regard to the Palestinian issue.

The King's tireless efforts reflect Jordan's desire to build up a unified Arab platform which can face the world as one. They also portray Jordan's top priority, regardless of the sacrifices necessary, that is to defend and enhance the Palestinian cause.

The main purpose of the King's present tour, and that of his recent visits to Baghdad and Riyadh, is to acquaint the Arab leaders with the outcome of the Arab League delegation's visits to several world capitals, and the King's own talks with President Reagan and senior U.S. officials. Among the other issues the King will be considering with the Arab leaders are the present Jordanian initiative on behalf of the legitimate rights of the Palestinians and the framework of recent political developments.

We are certain that the King's present tour will result in a full understanding of, and complete support for the joint Jordanian-Palestinian effort amongst the Arab states visited.

Jordan fully recognises the dangers of the present scenario, and the degree of aggressiveness practised by the Israeli authorities in carrying out their settlement plans. While making every effort possible to forge a political settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict, Jordan relies on both Arab support and international backing. Therefore we call upon the U.S. administration to honour its international responsibility and pledge to work out a just and comprehensive settlement of the Middle East conflict. This must be based on the return of the occupied territories to their lawful owners, and the setting up of an independent Palestinian state.

COME TO THINK OF IT...

On being Arab

By Ibrahim Abu Nab

One should perhaps listen to Dr. Victor Ayoub on being Arab and what it means. He is, to be sure, not an Arab himself nor is he likely to become one in the usual sense of the word. But he certainly knows how it feels!

Dr. Ayoub is not to be confused with any Jordanian Ayoub that you may encounter in Amman, especially if you are on a press mission, nor with any other Ayoub in the Middle East. He was born in Detroit, Michigan, and as far as he knows he is American through and through. A long time ago, some Americans used to ask him upon hearing his became more familiar with the Middle Eastern problem, or perhaps got worse.

"What part of the Middle East do you come from?" they say. "Well," he would retort, "I come from the Middle East in as much as Senator Edward Kennedy comes from Ireland!" But they wouldn't believe it. How come he is dark-skinned and goes around with such a funny name if he is American, they say. He must be one of those clever Arabs from South Yemen, Oman or Saudi Arabia who went to Harvard and are up to something!

Actually, Dr. Ayoub is of Arab origin. His parents went long ago to America as immigrants. They, according to him, were Arabs by birth, upbringing and culture. Even when they went to the U.S. and lived there, they still considered themselves Arabs. But he is different because he is American by birth, upbringing and culture. He was born in Detroit, lived in a predominantly WASPish area and went to a WASPish college. He is grateful to the Arabs only in the way they brought him up to be a good American!

A Jewish American at one time wondered why Dr. Ayoub, a respected professor of anthropology at Antioch College, should be supportive of the Palestinian people. Wasn't that enough proof of him being Arab? "But," Dr. Ayoub answered, "I support the Palestinians not because of blood ties or out of racial kinship, but because I think they have a just cause." What is justice anyway? What is truth? The American Jew could not understand. He thought there must be some trick in it. And it took a lot of explanation by Dr. Ayoub before the other fellow could be persuaded to retreat a little when he finally said: "O, you've given me something to think about at least." I wonder if he is still scratching his head.

In fact, listening to Dr. Ayoub's lecture on Jan. 12, in the American Centre on "Arab-Americans and the U.S. Ethnic Experience" made you feel at some points that he was doing nothing but extolling the Jews in America and their great contribution to what America is. But that is because, as he says by way of comparison, there are ten million Jews in America with a solid ethnic base and continuity of immigration which started long before the Arabs even thought of America, while there are only two million Americans of Arab origin scattered all over!

You see, he doesn't even like to admit that Arab-Americans can be described as Arab. If anyone of them has risen above the ordinary crowd, like James Abu Rix or Ralph Nader, it was because he did it on an American basis. A senator from Connecticut, for instance, who was of Lebanese origin, was the one who last June gave the press his Democratic Party's endorsement of Israel's invasion of Lebanon because his political constituency was Jewish. How un-Arab can you get when you are so American! And Dr. Ayoub thinks that this is not bad. Not the invasion of course, but the political dynamics.

I must admit, I find it a bit strange. Dr. Ayoub declares the American melting pot a success. But can one say, in this case that the Arabic contribution to the success of the American melting pot is far greater than the Jewish one? Or is it that those who melt away get no credit for it? Nevertheless, Dr. Ayoub who had never joined an Arab group in America had finally decided to join one. He joined the Anti Discrimination Committee of Senator James Abu Rix. I think he should thank his Jewish compatriots for it. They forced it on him.

"I got sick and tired of the use of the word 'Arab' to describe anything bad," he said. He might have gotten sick of being forced to be Arab and feel bad about it, you might say. Still, he did not join ADC because it was working for Arab causes, but rather because it was trying to protect Americans of Arab origin against discrimination.

In the 'process', Arab-Americans discover their hyphen. But they also discover that Arabism is very much like Americanism: Arabism is not a race but a culture. There is no discrimination that once an Arab always an Arab. It's not a matter of blood or even language. You are an Arab if you feel like one and if you have a community of interests with the Arabs. And that is what Americanism maybe all about.

Come to think of it, there is a lot in my opinion to say for Dr. Ayoub's Arabism! He has an Ayoub's patience (Ayoub being the job of biblical fame and an Arab model for patience). Also his refusal to be drawn into a blood relationship and consequently the kind of blood feuds that are being revived and given life by our erstwhile cousins. And last but not least, his refusal to pass for an Arab. We have plenty of Arabs here and we need all the Americans that we can get who are like Dr. Ayoub. Indeed, we don't need Arabs over there. We have plenty who are overfed or overfedup and overhere!

The stiffest challenge so far to the defence minister

El Salvador's defiant colonel

By Bernd Debusmann

Reuter

SAN SALVADOR — El Salvador's U.S.-backed armed forces have survived a mutiny which damaged the prestige of Defence Minister Jose Guillermo Garcia and set back efforts to polish the image of the military here. The five-day rebellion of a top field commander, Colonel Sigifredo Ochoa Perez, was the stiffest challenge yet to the authority of the defence minister, who is widely regarded as the most influential man in the government.

"He weathered the challenge," said a European ambassador. "But he took so many blows one wonders whether he will fully recover." However, diplomats said the crisis also proved the durability of the military establishment despite deep divisions on issues ranging from the conduct of the war against left-wing guerrillas to agrarian reform and how to deal with corruption. Colonel Ochoa, who was held out as a model for other commanders by U.S. advisers to the armed forces here, rebelled against an order from General Garcia relieving him of the command of the northern province of Cabanas and appointing him military attaché to the Salvadorean embassy in Urguay.

Instead of quietly accepting the post, demotion in everything but name, Col. Ochoa sealed off his province, demanded the resignation of the defence minister, accused him of tolerating corruption and denounced him as a "little Hitler." The local leaders of all political parties represented in Cabanas promptly issued a joint declaration of support for the rebel. So did the council of province authority which embraces all senior civil servants. Nearly 4,000 civilians poured into the main square of San Salvador, the provincial capital, chanting "Ochoa do not go."

The provincial authorities issued a statement listing six reasons why the 40-year-old colonel should stay, from his success in pacifying Cabanas to his support for civic projects. "It was precisely his popularity which prompted Garcia to move against him," said a middle-ranking officer in the capital. "The minister obviously thought Ochoa was getting too big for his boots."

While Colonel Ochoa proclaimed his defiance in a series of media interviews, General Garcia lobbied for support among El Salvador's commanders in a series of telephone calls stressing that the survival of the military hierarchy was at stake.

Military obedience

Despite urgent pleas for a solid front, it took the general two full days to get 28 commanders to sign a communiqué upholding the principle of military obedience and criticising the rebellion in terms diplomats here described as lukewarm.

Even still, the chiefs of the air force and the first infantry battalion declined to sign the statement. "In a country where normal standards prevail, there could have been only one response to the mutiny: A court martial," said a senior Western diplomat.

Instead, the mutiny was settled with a compromise which provided for Colonel Ochoa to go to Washington to study at the inter-American defence council, one of the six war colleges in the United States. Western diplomats here agreed that General Garcia had not dared to demand decisive action against the mutineer for fear of causing an open split in the 24,000-member armed forces.

Although he commands the loyalty of senior officers who owe their positions to him, many combat commanders to Col. Ochoa's generation blame Gen. Garcia for the continuing stalemate in the war against the guerrillas.

Western experts say the men he appointed since becoming defence minister after a coup in 1979 tied to use the tactics of conventional warfare, deploying large forces against small, highly mobile bands of guerrillas. That "safety in numbers" mentality has cost the army dearly in casualties as insurgents ambushed large government convoys. Col. Ochoa was the leading exponent of the tactical doctrines U.S. advisers have been advocating as the only way to win the war: Fight the guerrillas on their own terms in small groups, send out night patrols, set up night ambushes, establish reliable intelligence by winning the support of the population.

Government officials reluctantly admit that the public dispute set back a campaign to improve the military's image, an uphill task in a country where members of the security forces have been blamed for more than 30,000 political murders. For almost a year now, television and radio spots, newspaper advertisements and huge billboards dotted across El Salvador's lush green countryside have tried to convince the populace that the armed forces exist to serve the people. "The removal of one of the few commanders who managed to win popular support and respect must raise some doubts over the message," said a civil servant.

Nuclear freeze campaign drafts proposal for legislation on U.S. and Soviet arms restraint

By Christopher Hanson

Reuter

WASHINGTON — Leaders of a U.S. campaign for a freeze on nuclear weapons, after victories at last autumn's polls, may ask Congress to bar spending on new American nuclear arms provided Moscow foregoes similar weapons. The freeze campaign's national conference next month will discuss a proposal to throw the big grassroots movement's lobbying power behind a novel strategy under which congress would attempt to legislate both U.S. and Soviet arms restraint.

Supporters say this would avoid the pitfall of appearing to advocate unilateral U.S. disarmament, a position which could consign the movement to political oblivion. "I think it quite likely the conference will go along with the idea," Reuben McCormack of the freeze campaign's strategy task force, which drafted the proposal in a Washington meeting last week, told Reuters.

The movement proved itself as a political force last November when resolutions for a bilateral freeze on producing and deploying nuclear weapons won approval in eight of nine non-binding state ballots, including President Reagan's home state of California.

Now leaders want thousands of supporters to rally in Washington in March to urge Congress to pass a similar freeze resolution. The House of Representatives, which last year rejected such a resolution by only two votes, is now more heavily Democratic with a number of new members sympathetic to the freeze. But even if the House and the Republican-controlled Senate pass non-binding freeze resolutions, the White House would not necessarily pay much attention.

It says a freeze would help the Kremlin by locking the United States into a position of nuclear inferiority. Thus freeze campaign leaders have been debating what the movement should do next. Sources within the movement told Reuters one group wants continued efforts to pass freeze resolutions at local level. But others say the novelty of this approach is bound to wear off.

Another group wants active lobbying against new nuclear systems such as the powerful and accurate MX missile, even while the Soviet Union moves towards deploying similar weapons, the sources said.

But this approach would make the freeze campaign look more like the West German "Greens" and other European anti-nuclear groups. Critics say it could be seen as a call for unilateral disarmament, which might prove an act of political suicide in the narrow, relatively conservative climate of U.S. opinion. A leader of the U.S. movement who asked not to be named said he wrote recently to Randall Kehler, the freeze campaign's executive director, warning him that a unilateral approach could seriously undermine support for the freeze drive.

Other freeze supporters have commented that the November resolutions called for a mutual freeze with Moscow. The freeze strategy task force's plans would be fully consistent with the bilateral approach. One proposal would be a bill prohibiting further spending on testing or developing the MX missiles unless tests continued on a new, highly-accurate Soviet solid-fuel missile, Mr. McCormack said.

New sea-based intercontinental ballistic missiles, precision-guided cruise missiles and other weapons could also be put under restrictions dependent on Soviet restraint, he said.

This approach would work only where Soviet compliance with the restriction could be verified independently, campaign sources said. But former Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) Director William Colby told a recent public meeting on arms control legislation that spy satellites and other electronic espionage devices now at Washington's disposal would allow verification in a wide range.

Advocates of the new strategy say it would put the onus on Moscow to comply with the legislated restrictions, but could face the danger of vetoes by the conservative Mr. Reagan. Freeze advocates plan to back 1984 presidential candidates who support a nuclear freeze or who are serious arms control advocates, freeze campaign co-director Barbara Roche said.

Another U.S. anti-nuclear movement leader said it was almost certain to be seen as partisan if it entered the presidential fray. Many freeze supporters are Democrats and the Republican administration strongly opposes the idea. But Miss Roche said a serious effort would be made to support freeze advocates in the Republican Party as well.

English soccer championship turns into a two-horse race

LONDON (R) — The English soccer championship turned into a two-horse race Sunday when Manchester United beat Nottingham Forest 1-0 at Old Trafford.

Liverpool, who had a dictable 1-0 home win over Nottingham, United are now the club with any chance, albeit a narrow one, of catching "The Reds".

Liverpool's victory, courtesy of eighth minute Phil Neal goal, kept their points tally to 36, 10 ahead of United and 13 ahead of Arsenal.

Forest's defeat has left Brian Clough's team with little to play in the coming months following a miserable series of results in the past two weeks.

On January eighth they were knocked out of the English Football Association (F.A.) Cup by second division Derby County, were thrashed 4-0 by United in a League Cup quarter-final tie in midweek and now they are out of the championship running.

United are unlikely to overhaul Liverpool in the remaining 17 games but they kept their slender hopes alive with goals by England winger Steve Coppell, who converted a 63rd minute penalty, and Dutch midfielder Arnold Muhren seven minutes later.

Forest's lack of punch up front, coupled with Justin Fashanu's return to form, must be embarrassing for Clough.

Fashanu, who moved across the city to Notts County in December, scored the only goal in his side's 1-0 win over Arsenal — his fifth in eight games since being jettisoned by Forest.

With Wednesday's League Cup hammering still fresh in the mem-

Borg postpones return to tournament tennis

NEW YORK (R) — Bjorn Borg postponed his return to tournament tennis, prompting speculation that he may retire.

At the Masters Tennis Championships said Saturday, he had withdrawn from a tournament in Brussels, where he was due to launch his comeback the Grand Prix circuit in March, and from subsequent events in Rotterdam and Milan.

Borg's withdrawal from the tournaments became known Friday after a Rome newspaper reported that the 26-year-old had tired of tennis and intended to retire.

The newspaper, La Repubblica, said Borg had notified representatives of the U.S.-based national Management Group he wanted to sever about 50 ties he has with various companies.

But Bob Kahn of IMG, who represents Borg in the United States, said here that Borg had not informed him of any plans to retire, "and if he hasn't told me, he hasn't told the people from Italy."

Sources at the Masters Tennis Championships here gave little credence to the Rome report, since Borg had indicated a desire to return to tournament competition following a self-imposed exile from the game last year.

The five-time Wimbledon champion withdrew from the Grand Prix circuit last year after refusing to qualify for Grand Prix events.

Under Grand Prix rules, Borg was required to play in qualifying rounds before being declared to sign up for a minimum of 10 Grand Prix tournaments.

But late last year Borg said he would play the required number of Grand Prix tournaments in 1983 and was eager to regain his number one world ranking.

Borg is currently in Thailand on a promotional tour for Scandinavian airlines. He is due in the United States early next month to play a series of exhibition matches followed by an eight-man event in Toronto.

Americans set new marks at Los Angeles athletics meeting

LOS ANGELES (R) — Americans Billy Olson, Mary Decker Tabb and Evelyn Ashford all set world indoor bests at an invitational indoor athletics meeting here Friday night.

Olson set his mark in the pole vault with a leap of 18 feet, 10 1/4 inches (5.76 metres) to break his own record of 18 feet 10 1/4 inches (5.75 metres) set last week in Ottawa.

Tabb set a new mark in the women's two-mile run with a time of nine minutes 31.7 seconds to break the previous record of 9:37.03 set by American Joan Hansen last year.

It raised to seven the number of world indoor best marks currently held by Tabb along with her outdoor records in the 5,000 metres and 10,000 metres runs.

Ashford's record came in the women's 50-yard dash in 5.77 seconds, eclipsing the 5.80 set by Andrea Lynch of Britain in 1978 and repeated last year by American Jeanette Bolden.

Ashford was the only double winner of the night, also winning the 60-yard dash in 6.70.

Eamonn Coghlan of Ireland won his second consecutive race after being sidelined all last year, as he finished first in the mile with a time of 3:55.4.

Coghlan said afterwards, "the only thing I was lacking was confidence, but after tonight I have that back as well."

Canadian Milt Ottey, the world's top-ranked high jumper, won his event with a leap of seven feet five inches (2.26 metres) but injured himself above the left ankle trying for a greater height and had to be carried off the track.

The only other foreign winner was Sam Koskei of Kenya, who won the 1,000 yards in 2:08.8.

Other winners, who were all Americans, included Greg Foster in the 60 yards hurdles in 6.93 seconds, Houston McTear in the 50 yards dash in 5.28 seconds, Tony Darden in the 500 yards in 55.4 seconds and Doug Padilla in the two miles in 8:35.6. Larry Myricks won the long jump with a leap of 26 feet 3/4 of an inch (7.94 metres).

Olympic chiefs defer decision on professional soccer, tennis players

LOS ANGELES (R) — Olympic chiefs Saturday deferred taking controversial decisions on admitting professional soccer and tennis players and whether to include baseball and board sailing in next year's Los Angeles Games.

Proposals to allow professionals to play in the Los Angeles soccer tournament are to be discussed by the International Olympic Committee (IOC) and the International Football Federation (FIFA) at the first meeting of a joint working group in Lausanne, Switzerland, on February 14.

With the qualifying tournament already under way the group, four members from each body, will consider FIFA's proposals to allow professional players to compete in Los Angeles so long as they have not taken part in a World Cup competition and are not contracted to promote sportsware.

IOC President Juan Antonio Samaranch of Spain told a press conference at the end of a four-day meeting of the IOC executive board here that proposals concerning the eligibility of professional tennis players in 1988 would be discussed at the full IOC session in New Delhi in March.

The executive board also deferred until the March meeting the questions of board sailing and baseball in Los Angeles.

Board sailing is included in the Olympic programme for the first time. But plans for the competition have been hit by a long legal wrangle between two rival equipment manufacturers.

A compromise arrangement enabling one manufacturer to provide boards for the Olympic event and the second to supply equipment for a special demonstration competition was reached with the help of the International Yacht Racing Union late last year.

But this solution has run aground because the Los Angeles programme provides for only two demonstration sports, baseball and tennis.

A further complication is a late move by the International Amateur Baseball Association to have next year's tournament elevated from demonstration to full Olympic medal status with eight teams taking part instead of four.

The application will be considered in New Delhi but Samaranch gave some indication of the IOC's attitude Wednesday when he said such a move would be "very difficult."

The board said it had agreed to add a new, super-heavyweight category to the boxing tournament for next year's games.

The new division, for boxers weighing 90 kg and over, will have a maximum of 12 competitors. It will bring the number of Olympic boxing categories to 12 in line with other major international amateur tournaments.

The board also decided that a possible IOC fact-finding mission to South Africa would not be considered until after the Los Angeles Games.

An IOC commission to investigate whether sport in South Africa is now racially integrated was set up in 1980. The republic has been suspended from the Olympic movement for the past 12 years because of its apartheid policies.

The USOC and the U.S. governing body for track and field events, The Athletic Congress (TAC), claim Nehemiah is eligible to compete in domestic U.S. meetings even though he plays professional football.

The IOC president said that despite earlier worries he now expected the Los Angeles Games to be among the best in Olympic history. Agreement had been reached on all the questions raised by delegates from 145 National Olympic Committees.

Referring to the African walk-out at the 1976 Montreal Games and the U.S. led boycott of the 1980 Moscow Olympics, he said there had been no mention of a boycott during his 10-day stay in Los Angeles.

Connors fights hard for Masters semi-final berth

NEW YORK (R) — Top-seeded Jimmy Connors battled back from a 1-4 deficit in the first set to beat Johan Kriek, 7-6, 6-2, Friday night to reach the semi-finals of the Masters Tennis Championships.

Connors will face Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia in the semi-finals. Lendl got through Friday by beating Yannick Noah of France, 6-4, 7-5.

Lendl beat Connors in the final of the Challenge of Champions two weeks ago in Chicago. But in all Connors has beaten Lendl nine times — including victory in the final of last year's U.S. Open — and lost to him only twice.

John McEnroe and Guillermo Vilas of Argentina will meet in the other semi-final match.

McEnroe gained his place by beating Jose Luis Clerc of Argentina, while Vilas reached the semi-finals with a victory over Andres Gomez of Ecuador.

The winner of Sunday's final will receive $100,000 and the runnerup $60,000.

Lendl is seeking his second straight Masters title, but neither Connors, McEnroe nor Vilas has reached the final since winning the event — Connors in 1978, McEnroe in 1979 and Vilas in 1974 in the only Masters ever played on grass.

For a time Friday night it appeared that Connors, for the second year in a row, would not make it to the semi-finals.

Kriek, winner of the last two Australian Open titles, could do no wrong at the outset. Over most of the first five games, he outduelled Connors from the baseline, ripping a stream of winners into both corners as he kept Connors on the defensive.

Kriek, whose attacking game is a blend of power and speed, took a 4-1 lead on service breaks in the first and fifth games as Connors was slow in finding his rhythm.

But then, suddenly, Kriek's ground game disintegrated and Connors began to blunt the force of Kriek's powerful serve with sharply-angled returns.

Connors, who did not score with an outright winner over the first five games, also began to attack the net to register volley winners.

Kriek dropped his serve for the first time after four backhand errors in the sixth game and then Connors drew level 4-4 on another break in the eighth.

For the remainder of the set, Kriek was fighting an uphill battle.

He saved one setpoint in the 10th game and six more in the 12th before holding serve to force a tiebreaker, which Connors won, 7-5.

Connors was in complete command in the second set, breaking Kriek on three of his four service games as his opponent double-faulted six times in the set.

After the match Connors said he had had trouble getting started.

"But I began to get pretty confident late in the first set," he said. "He didn't hit that many by me after the first few games."

Kriek conceded that Connors' game improved as the match progressed.

"I started out very well, but I couldn't keep it up," he said. "He started keeping the ball real deep and it was difficult for me to get to the net. He plays real smart and he's a better player than I am."

Kriek hammered in six aces but they were offset by his 10 double-faults. He also managed only 46 per cent of his first serves as against 76 per cent by Connors.

After the match Grand Prix supervisor Ken Farrar announced that Connors had been fined $1,000 for "an audible obscenity" during the match in front of a crowd of 15,250 at Madison Square Garden.

WCT moves to court against other professional tennis associations

NEW YORK (R) — The International Tennis Federation, the Association of Tennis Professionals and the Men's International Professional Tennis Council were charged Saturday in a court suit with taking part in a conspiracy to monopolize men's international championship tournaments.

The charge was made in an anti-monopoly suit filed in Federal Court by World Championship Tennis of Dallas, Texas, sponsors of the World Series of Tennis and the World Championship of Tennis.

The suit claimed that the top 200 professional male tennis players were denied access to a free and open competition for their services. Instead, the suit said, they were limited to the Grand Slam and Volvo Grand Prix sponsored by the alleged conspirators.

The suit seeks unspecified damages to be determined by a judge.

According to court papers, the three defendants conspired with the United States Tennis Association, the Lawn Tennis Association of Great Britain, the French Tennis Federation and the Lawn Tennis Federation of Australia but these groups were not named as defendants.

The suit said the defendants and the other groups named as taking part in the conspiracy held monopoly powers over the players and could coerce them to take part only in matches they sponsored.

The suit, which also seeks to enjoin the defendants' activities, charged that their hold "is not authorized or sanctioned by any international or national governmental body."

The defendants have 20 days to answer the suit.

Spokesmen for the Association of Tennis Professionals (ATP) and the Men's International Professional Tennis Council assailed Lamar Hunt, founder and head of World Championship Tennis, for filing the suit.

"The players are shocked that Lamar Hunt is suing them," said Mike Davies, a former British Davis Cup star who was an aide to Hunt before joining the ATP.

"Every top player in the game today has, at one time or another, supported Lamar's circuit. The ATP is an association of international athletes and our interest is in serving our members and all tournaments."

"We are mystified as to what Lamar has to gain by this suit against the game," Davies said.

The men's pro council described the suit as unfortunate and said it was "unjustified litigation."

"However, this is just another example of the Hunt philosophy — if he cannot control it, he proceeds to try to destroy it and resort to the courts, and the expense attendant upon lawsuits is used by him as a weapon to intimidate," the council said in a statement.

"The council, which is composed of men who have invested their lives in making the game as great as it is today, will not be intimidated. Mr. Hunt will not be permitted to succeed," it said.

Lillee likely to be recalled by defeated Australians

MELBOURNE (R) — Dennis Lillee is set to return in a key World Series Cricket Cup match against England here Sunday after Australia suffered a second consecutive defeat by New Zealand and were left with fast bowling problems Saturday.

Lillee is likely to be recalled for his first appearance in the one-day triangular tournament because of fitness doubts over fellow fast bowlers Rodney Hogg, Geoff Lawson and Jeff Thomson.

The trio were in the side who crashed by 58 runs Saturday after a 47-run setback in Sydney on Tuesday. The New Zealanders made 246 for six in their quota of 50 overs and Australia replied with 188 in 44.1.

Lillee last played for his country in mid-November and has been out of action after undergoing surgery on his right knee. He was named earlier this week in Australia's 12 for the two one-day games here this weekend.

Hogg is the most doubtful for Sunday's game after being hit on the left ear by a delivery from fast bowler Richard Hadlee. Hogg had to retire hurt and needed a number of stitches in the gash.

Thomson has a severe throat infection, and captain Kim Hughes said: "Jeff will probably be having X-rays on his chest because he was really hampered and was struggling with the infection while bowling today."

Lawson, Australia's top wicket-taker in their recent 2-1 Ashes triumph over England, has a strained leg muscle.

Hughes said quick bowlers Ken McCleay of Western Australia, John Maguire from Queensland and Victoria's Rod McCurdy would all be placed on standby.

New Zealand's latest win has created a tightly-contested situation, and if England beat Australia Sunday the three teams will each have six points from six matches.

Australia, even allowing for their fitness problems, were outplayed in front of a 90,675 crowd Saturday.

New Zealand, put in after Hughes won the toss, produced a consistently effective batting display led by opener John Wright's top score of 84, including nine fours.

Wright and Bruce Edgar (32) provided an ideal base with a first wicket partnership of 83 in 88 minutes.

Wright and Glenn Turner (31) consolidated with a second wicket stand of 68 in 56 minutes, while skipper Geoff Howarth showed a return to form by hitting 30.

Australia lost John Dyson, David Hookes and Hughes cheaply before Kepler Wessels, top scorer with 62, and Greg Chappell (37) put on 63 in 53 minutes.

Khan returns to Pakistan's team for 5th test against India

LAHORE, Pakistan (R) — Pakistan have sprung a surprise by recalling Majid Khan to their squad for the fifth cricket test against India starting here Sunday.

Majid, 36-year-old former captain and one of their most experienced batsmen, is among 13 players named by Pakistan, who have an unbeatable 3-0 lead in the six-match series.

Majid played the last of his 62 tests against England at Leeds last August but when Pakistan returned home he was discarded for the three tests against Australia and the first four against India.

The inclusion of Majid instead of middle order batsman Haroon Rashid, who was named in the 13 for the fourth test but did not play, is Pakistan's only change.

Pakistan captain Imran Khan declared after their crushing win by an innings and 119 runs in the previous test that there would be no let up in the remaining two matches.

And that is a daunting prospect for an Indian side who have been outplayed at both test and one-day level on their tour.

India might draw some comfort from the fact that they drew the first test and gained their only win in the four-match one-day series at Lahore's Gaddafi Stadium.

Pakistani authorities have said they will allow up to 2,000 Indians to come to Pakistan for the test at Lahore which is close to the Indian border.

Elaborate arrangements have been made to transport Indian cricket fans from the Wagah border checkpoint, Lahore airport and the railway station to the cricket ground, official sources said.

They said facilities for re-entry visas had also been provided for those who wanted to come to Lahore daily during the match.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Lucas Electrical to cut 1,200 jobs

BIRMINGHAM, England (R) — A leading component company in Britain's motor industry, Lucas Electrical, Friday announced it was cutting 1,200 jobs because of the recession. A management spokesman said the step was necessary to reduce costs and improve the firm's price competitiveness. In three years Lucas has almost halved its workforce from 30,000 to around 16,000. The latest redundancies affect mainly white-collar and support staff following earlier cutbacks among production workers. A sister company making brakes, Lucas Girling, last week announced closure of a plant employing 550 people.

Bahraini minister to visit UAE

ABU DHABI (OPECNA) — Mr. Khalid Bin Abdullah Al Khalifa, Bahrain's minister of housing, arrives here Sunday on a five-day visit to discuss cooperation in the housing and construction sector with UAE officials. Mr. Al Khalifa will be briefed on UAE's performance in construction and shown laboratories where building materials are tested. The Bahraini minister will discuss exchange of construction expertise between the two countries, with officials of the UAE ministry of public works and housing.

Bankers to study Yugoslavian debt

LONDON (R) — A team of Western bank economists will visit Yugoslavia next week to study the country's debt payment problems, banking sources said Friday night. The decision to send the group was taken at a meeting of a 14-bank steering committee involved in a joint effort by commercial banks and monetary authorities to ease Yugoslavia's debt problems. The Belgrade government is already working with the IMF and has asked for a $500 million credit from the Basle-based BIS and a loan of unspecified size from the World Bank.

Arab council, GCC to expand ties

AMMAN (OPECNA) — The Arab Economic Union Council (AEUC) and the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) have agreed to exchange technical studies and research documentation, besides holding joint scientific seminars. Dr. Fakhri Kaddori, AEUC secretary general said Thursday. The two councils also agreed to hold meetings in support of joint Arab action on important issues. Dr. Kaddori visited Riyadh this week to confer with Mr. Abdullah Bishara, GCC secretary general.

Nigerian president to visit India

NEW DELHI (OPECNA) — President Shuguari of Nigeria is to pay a state visit to India from Jan. 25 to 28. An official statement here said the visit would be the first by a Nigerian head of state to India. Twenty-two joint venture projects set up by India are in operation in Nigeria, the statement added. President Shuguari is also visiting Pakistan.

Romania seeks debt rescheduling

LONDON (R) — Romania is seeking to defer repayment of about $750 million due to Western banks and governments this year, European banking sources said Friday. The sources said Romanian officials were devising a detailed proposal following two days of talks with bankers in London. Only last month Romania signed an agreement to stretch out payments on $2.3 billion of 1981 and 1982 debt to banks. The sources said bankers were studying new economic information from Romania. One banker said banks wanted to reschedule only what was absolutely necessary this year.

OPEC ministers hopeful on heading off price crash

GENEVA (R) — Kuwaiti Oil Minister Ali Khalifa Al Sabah said Saturday he hoped OPEC could agree on sharing out the depressed market for its oil at talks opening Sunday on heading off a potential price crash.

The 13 OPEC (Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries) oil ministers who began gathering here Saturday will try to devise an output quota system to protect their $34 a barrel reference price.

The ministers failed to agree a quota system at talks in Vienna last month.

Sheikh Ali told Reuters: "I hope we will reach an agreement on quotas. If not, we will cross that bridge when we reach it."

He added that the attitude of some of OPEC's members had changed perceptibly since December, but he added "we won't know until Sunday" whether OPEC could agree.

Iraqi Oil Minister Qassem Ahmad Taqi has said the talks might be OPEC's last chance to share the shrunken, recession-hit oil market before a full-scale price war.

OPEC's majority who were honouring the rules might jointly cut their prices, he said in Bahrain last weekend.

OPEC faces a grave crisis with some members, notably Iran and Libya, accused of discounting on official prices to get more of the market, at the expense of the rule-abiding majority.

Saudi Arabia, the world's largest exporter, has borne the brunt of defending the $34 price. Its output fell to what industry experts reckon was just over four million barrels daily early this month from an official ceiling of seven million.

Industry OPEC-watchers believe an output accord, while on balance the most likely outcome of the Geneva meeting, is not a foregone conclusion.

Iran, an ideological foe of conservative Saudi Arabia, has demanded an output quota of 3.2 million barrels a day, against 1.2 million under a now-lapsed accord reached in March.

Iran says the kingdom, which backs Iraq in the 29-month-old Iran-Iraq war, must make room for its rising output.

The possibility of a politically-tinged dispute hampering efforts to reach a quota agreement was highlighted Friday when Saudi state radio said this weekend's meeting would deprive "troublemakers" of influence over OPEC's future decisions.

Saudi Arabia and its allies in the Gulf Cooperation Council warned last year that their patience was running out as they watched customers turn to OPEC countries offering cheap crude.

But industry OPEC-watchers believe the kingdom fears that cutting its prices could threaten a round of competitive tariff cuts by other members.

Tumbling prices could trigger bankruptcy for some oil exporting nations with large debts, and threaten the collapse of the world monetary system.

An industry analyst said Iran had indicated privately to its customers in the past few days that it might cut its already heavily discounted prices if Saudi Arabia reduced its tariffs.

But signs of possible concessions by Libya emerged last weekend when key OPEC ministers met in Bahrain.

OPEC's current president, Mr. Mallam Yahaya Dikko of Nigeria, said then that he thought Tripoli would be reasonable on market share.

OPEC's problems stem from an unexpected drop in demand for its crude as the world remains in deep recession.

Total OPEC output has dropped to about 18 million barrels daily from a 1979 peak of 31 million, the industry estimates.

The authoritative Nicosia-based newsletter, Middle East

Economic Survey (MEES), said Saturday both Libya and Iran appeared ready to cut crude output.

Libya was speaking in terms of a cut to 1.2 to 1.3 million barrels a day within an OPEC production programme, against an earlier target of 1.8 million, it said.

Iran was reported to be willing to cut output to 2.5 million against a previous target of 3.2 million if the Saudis trimmed output to 4.5 million, it said.

MEES said close observers felt an OPEC-wide production programme would be extremely difficult to obtain at Geneva.

It also said OPEC members which favoured a price cut saw it not as a prelude to a price collapse but as a means of regaining control of the oil market and stimulating future oil demand.

Meanwhile, Qatar's Oil Minister Abdul Aziz bin Khalifa Al Thani was quoted Saturday as saying that cutting oil prices might be a final solution to problems facing the OPEC.

In an interview with the London-based Saudi daily Ash Sharq Al Awsat, he said "reducing oil prices is not something we wish, but circumstances might force us to do it as a final solution."

IBM beats world's recessionary trend

NEW YORK (R) — IBM, America's premier computer company, managed to beat the world's recessionary trend last year and increased its profits by nearly $800 million, but this was not good enough for Wall Street.

International Business Machines reported from its Armonk, New York, headquarters that preliminary worldwide net earnings rose in 1982 to $4,409 million from $3,610 million in 1981.

Worldwide gross income was $34,364 million in 1982, an increase of 18.2 per cent over the $29,070 million turned over in 1981. But IBM shares dropped sharply on Wall Street in heavy trading as analysts were surprised by the extent to which a currency accounting change aided fourth quarter profits.

Analysts said IBM had estimated the change would increase earnings by 10 per cent, but Friday's figures showed that the accounting move contributed an improvement of nearly 17 per cent.

IBM said it earned $1,590 million in the last quarter of 1982, compared with earnings of $1,173 million in the corresponding period of 1981.

Analysts said that, when the accounting change was allowed for, IBM's earnings were actually lower than some analysts had expected. IBM, the most active stock on the New York stock exchange Friday with 1.4 million shares changing hands, fell 3-1/4 to close at 94-1/4.

Mr. Harry Edelson, an analyst with the First Boston Corporation, said IBM's profits, adjusted to discount the accounting change, were about six cents a share under his estimates.

Quarterly earnings on a per-share basis were reported at $2.50 for the latest quarter, compared with $1.99 a year earlier. "There's disappointment in here," Mr. Edelson said. He added that the company's earnings were "still good compared with other companies."

IBM's stock price has been strong in recent weeks and has been reaching all-time high since the adoption of the new accounting method.

All American companies must adopt the new accounting rule, which softens the effect of currency fluctuations on earnings, by the end of 1983.

U.S. economy is ready to rebound

WASHINGTON (R) — The U.S. inflation rate slowed to 3.9 per cent last year, its smallest rise in a decade, the government said Friday.

It also issued a tally on new factory orders that provided fresh evidence that the depressed economy is ready to rebound. Last year's price rise compared with increases of 8.9 per cent in 1981 and 12.4 per cent in 1980.

It was the smallest annual gain since a 3.4 per cent rise in 1972, during a period of wage and price controls. Prices fell 0.3 per cent in December, only the second monthly decline in 17 years, the Labour Department said.

The Commerce Department said new orders for durable goods, regarded as a key indicator of future economic activity, surged a record 12 per cent last month — one of the strongest signals yet that the economy is poised for recovery.

Most of the gain was owing to an increase in defence orders, which more than doubled from the month before. The increase in orders for non-defence equipment was a more modest, but still healthy, 2.4 per cent last month.

"These rises are another sign, along with stepped up housing starts and automobile assemblies, that a recovery is beginning," Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige said.

But the good news from Washington did not buoy investor confidence as prices fell sharply on Wall Street.

The Dow Jones index of 30 leading industrial shares dropped nearly 18 points. Brokers said this was because of worries that the recent slide in interest rates had come to an end, a factor that might slow the recovery.

President Reagan told a news conference earlier that 1983 would see an American economy and an America on the mend.

The recession which economists believe started in mid-1981 has produced a jobless rate of 10.8 per cent, a 42-year high that represents more than 12 million people out of work.

The Labour Department said that most of last year's improved inflation figures reflected a decline in mortgage rates and a marked slowdown in the pace of energy price rises.

Soviet satellite's main section expected to crash Sunday night

WASHINGTON (R) — The main section of a crippled Soviet nuclear-powered spy satellite is plunging back to earth and could land Sunday night Washington time, according to U.S. and Soviet experts.

But as officials in several countries on the satellite's path took safety precautions, U.S. scientists repeated Friday there was a 70 per cent chance that its nuclear reactor and control module would splash into the ocean and pose no radiation threat.

U.S. officials also said the nuclear fuel aboard another, smaller section of the satellite, which they expect to descend in mid-February, will probably burn up on re-entry.

The Soviet Union said in a note to U.N. Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar Friday night that the main pieces of Cosmos 1402 would enter the atmosphere over the region of the Arabian Sea late Sunday-Washington time.

The satellite went wrong and broke into three sections last month. The Soviet Union followed a call by the Pentagon, which has been giving progress reports on Cosmos, for Moscow to predict when its ocean-surveillance satellite would fall out of orbit.

The Soviet Union also released the text of a note sent on Wednesday to the secretary general which said the satellite's radiation would be "within the limits recommended by the international commission on radiological protection."

But while the Pentagon agreed the fuel core would probably burn up, officials said Cosmos' main section could be a threat.

They cited the case of a similar Soviet satellite, Cosmos 954, which crashed in Canada's northern territories five years ago. The nuclear core burned up during reentry but radioactive debris was strewn across thousands of kilometres of land.

They said the pieces of Cosmos 954 that rained down were radioactive enough to be dangerous if someone came in close contact with them.

The officials said the safest result would be for Cosmos 1402, used by the Soviet Union to monitor activities of the world's navies, to fall into the deep ocean.

But they questioned the Soviet ability to predict so early where the still-orbiting Cosmos would land. They estimated there was a 15 per cent chance it would fall in the Soviet Union, three per cent in Canada and two per cent in the United States.

Belgians take that one-in-a-million chance

WALEM, Belgium (R) — A dozen senior Belgian officials huddled in a radiation-proof control room inside a military fort here Friday against the million-to-one chance of Cosmos 1402 crashing in Belgium.

"There is only a chance in a million," Col. Marcel Hebbinkx, the head of Belgian civil defence, told Reuters. "But it is always possible, and if it happens we will be ready."

The 59-year-old colonel is in charge of coordinating emergency services in case the nuclear-powered satellite lands in Belgium or scatters radioactive debris over the country.

The Belgian operation is being controlled from a cramped ground-floor room in the military fort. The only access is across a narrow bridge over a medieval-style moat and then through a thick steel automatic gate.

Inside, top officials from seven government departments sat reading newspapers and waiting for latest details of the satellite, ready to put into action their carefully organised contingency plans. They moved in Thursday night.

Within seconds of the Walem control room learning that the satellite was landing in Belgium, Col. Hebbinkx would push a button on a special control panel, setting off 11,000 sirens throughout the country.

Five full-time mobile civil defence teams and about 6,500 volunteers, all in radio contact with the crisis centre, are standing by on full alert to track down the exact location of the crashed satellite, the colonel said.

In Switzerland a similar group of officials headed by a government radioactivity expert is also standing by with contingency plans, the interior ministry said in Berne.

A ministry statement warned people to steer clear of any unidentified fragments which could have come from Cosmos 1402 and report them to the police.

National land agency chief Mutsuki Kato told reporters the point of impact would be known only about an hour in advance. He would head the special group to take any measures needed if debris hit Japan.

SPD pledges to keep American nuclear missiles off W. Germany

DORTMUND, West Germany.

(R) — The opposition Social Democratic Party (SPD) has emerged from its general election congress vowing that if it wins the March 6 poll it will take every possible step to avoid the deployment of new U.S. nuclear missiles in West Germany.

Its candidate for chancellor, Hans-Jochen Vogel, also made clear he feels Washington now bears the major responsibility for the success of disarmament negotiations with the Soviet Union in Geneva.

He welcomed what he called "the constructive elements in the latest disarmament initiatives" from Moscow and demanded a constructive counter-proposal from the United States.

Mr. Vogel told delegates Friday that if he were elected he might have to reconsider the present government's willingness to deploy U.S. Cruise and Pershing II missiles if the Soviet Union had not agreed by the end of this year to remove its medium-range SS-20 missiles.

Mr. Vogel said if the Geneva talks failed because of the unwillingness of either side to reach an agreement, this would strongly influence the SPD decision on how to interpret the 1979 NATO deployment plan.

The conservative government of Chancellor Helmut Kohl, in power since last September, has firmly stated that it will conform to the plan to deploy the U.S. missiles if the Soviet Union makes no disarmament concessions.

Although the NATO plan was agreed to by the then-SPD Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, Mr. Schmidt and Mr. Vogel now stress that the Geneva talks must succeed even if they only produce a compromise solution.

"There must be a compromise," Mr. Schmidt told the Congress. Another former West German chancellor, SPD chairman Willy Brandt, said Mr. Vogel was seeking a mandate "to do everything humanly possible" to make the deployment of new U.S. missiles superfluous.

SPD disarmament expert Horst Ehmke has suggested an agreement under which the Soviets could keep some of their SS-20s if the United States agreed not to deploy the Pershings and sharply cut the planned number of Cruise missiles.

Clearly alarmed over the appeal to the electorate of the SPD approach, Mr. Kohl's Christian Democrats have also now started talking about the possibility of "an interim solution" to limit the number of medium-range missiles on both sides.

On the domestic front, Mr. Vogel unveiled a "100-day programme" to fight unemployment and revive the economy.

Its main plank would be a law to reduce the number of working hours and curb overtime. He rejected the government's claim that the rising number of unemployed, now heading towards the 2.5 million mark, resulted from policies carried out by past SPD-led governments.

Horst Ehmke has suggested an agreement under which the Soviets could keep some of their SS-20s if the United States agreed not to deploy the Pershings and sharply cut the planned number of Cruise missiles.

Iranian pilot defects to Britain

LONDON (R) — An Iranian air force pilot, Captain Hamid Zirkabash, said he had defected to Britain and asked for political asylum. Capt. Zirkabash, 27, told Reuters he flew with his wife and child to a Gulf state and landed his plane on a road. He refused to say how many others were in the military aircraft, which was later flown back to Iran. Spokesmen for Britain's Foreign Office and Home Office said they had not received applications for asylum from Capt. Zirkabash.

Portland hijacker tried it before

PORTLAND, Oregon (R) — A man who was shot dead while trying to hijack a Boeing 727 was on parole for attempted air piracy in 1980 of the same flight, a spokesman for the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) said. Glen Tripp, 20, was shot Thursday night by an FBI agent at Portland airport after claiming to have a shoebox full of explosives and demanding to be flown to Afghanistan. The spokesman said Tripp was arrested at Seattle airport after the first incident in July 1980, and was on 20 years probation.

British driver jailed for attacking police

BURY ST EDMUNDS, England (R) — Kieron Moroney, chased by a police car after he attacked it with a pitchfork, screamed to a halt, reversed his pick-up truck and towed it away. The two policemen dived from the patrol car before Moroney hauled it through the streets, side-swiping five other vehicles on the way. A court in this eastern England market town was told, Moroney, 26, who savaged the patrol car with his pitchfork after being stopped for having a faulty back light, was jailed for one month for reckless driving and causing criminal damage. "This is a case not without its humorous aspects but it is a serious case," the judge told him.

Senate Republican leader to retire

KNOXVILLE, Tennessee (R) — Senate Republican leader Howard Baker, President Reagan's most influential ally on Capitol Hill, announced he will retire from Congress when his term expires in 1984. Mr. Baker, 57, declined to comment on widespread speculation that he might seek the 1984 Republican presidential nomination if Mr. Reagan decides not to run again. He told a news conference in his home state that he had urged the president to seek re-election and would do everything possible to assist him. Mr. Reagan expressed deep regret at the prospect of losing his key ally in getting Republican programmes through Congress over the past two years. Mr. Baker said he had decided that after 18 years he should not make the Senate a lifetime career. "I will be ready to move on to other things."

Kenyan officer jailed for neglecting duties

NAIROBI (R) — A Kenyan air force officer accused of hiding in his house while airmen under his command joined an attempt to overthrow the government has been jailed for four years. Lt. Col. David Thangate, former deputy commander of Nairobi's air force base, north of Nairobi, lived only 300 metres from the headquarters where many officers reported for duty, the court was told. Col. Thangate stayed in his home for two days before reporting for duty on Aug. 3, the court was told. He was convicted of failing to suppress a mutiny.

Bolivian coalition shaky

LA PAZ (R) — Bitter disputes in Bolivia's ruling leftist coalition threatened the survival of the first civilian government in Bolivia after nearly 18 years of uninterrupted military rule, political sources said Saturday.

The crisis was sparked earlier this month when six members of the movement of the Revolutionary Left (MIR) quit the cabinet after accusing the government of being dominated by a clique.

President Hernan Siles Zuazo Friday reappointed part of the cabinet which resigned two days ago to allow him a free hand in reshuffling his administration.

But he still has to consider how to replace the six MIR ministers. The sources said he was considering appointing ministers from a dissident faction of his National Revolutionary Movement of the Left and giving some portfolios to the Christian Democrats, who hold one ministerial post at present.

Trade unions and newspapers have warned that the crisis could have dire consequences for the three-month-old government and the future of democracy in Bolivia, which has averaged more than one coup a year in its 157 years of independence from Spain.

Islamabad cracks down on students

ISLAMABAD (R) — A military court has sentenced 33 students to various terms of hard labour and ordered 11 of them to be lashed in an apparent attempt to put down student unrest this week in several Pakistani cities.

The court's verdict was announced in Rawalpindi at the end of a day-long trial of the 33 technology college students, who were arrested last Wednesday after police found several unauthorised pistols and daggers in their hostels.

They were among at least 66 students officially reported arrested this week in Rawalpindi, the Punjab towns of Arifwala and Sahiwal and the Sind provincial capital of Karachi after violence against the authorities.

Official sources said the 33 students arrested in Rawalpindi were charged with unauthorised possession of arms and ammunition, unlawful assembly in violation of a martial law regulation, interference with public transport and use of force against police.

The court awarded from five to 10 lashes and from one year to three years hard labour to 11 of them and one year's hard labour to the remaining 22.

All were sent to jail after the verdict but the punishment of flogging will be carried out later, official sources said.

Rome refuses to release Bulgarian

ROME (R) — An Italian investigating magistrate Saturday rejected a request for the release of Bulgarian Sergei Antonov, detained for suspected complicity in the 1981 assassination attempt against Pope John Paul II, justice ministry officials said.

Mr. Antonov's lawyers started proceedings against the Rome attorney general's office this week, claiming breach of judicial confidentiality after newspapers reported that state prosecutors had recommended his release should be refused.

NATO says Soviet aid to developing states puts pressure on the economy

BRUSSELS (R) — The Soviet Union's aid to its client states in the developing world has proved a significant drain on Moscow's limited economic resources, according to a NATO study made available Saturday.

The study estimates that total economic aid and arms deliveries to the 11 client countries was almost $6.3 billion in 1980, half of this going to Cuba alone.

The NATO document makes a distinction between developing countries where Communist governments are firmly established — Cuba, Mongolia, Vietnam, Cambodia, Laos and North Korea — and other developing clients where Marxist-inspired administrations are in power but are not considered to be in firm control.

The second group comprises Angola, Ethiopia, Mozambique, Afghanistan and South Yemen. The first group received a large amount of economic aid — $4.7 billion — and relatively few arms — $350 million worth — in 1980, the study said.

It said that in the same year, the second category was sent arms and equipment worth $900 million but very limited economic aid, totalling $300 million.

Moscow paper implicitly criticises Soviet old guard

MOSCOW (R) — A Moscow newspaper has published quotations from Lenin reminding a previous Soviet leadership of the systematic need to train young people with fresh ideas, and warning against letting veterans hold on to power for too long.

In what appeared to be an indirect criticism of the age structure of the present Communist Party elite, the daily Sovetskaya Rossiya (Soviet Russia) cited Lenin in a front page article, giving no date for the revolutionary leader's remarks and offering no comment or explanation.

It quoted Lenin, who died in 1924 at the age of 53, as having warned against allowing the same people to occupy important positions in the Communist Party central committee and the government for too long.

It said Lenin had told other members of the leadership that young people were needed to provide fresh ideas. He also wrote a detailed letter expressing concern about the state of health of "party veterans" who were in top positions.

"Young people must be sent to every commissariat (leadership department) for training and to provide a wider choice — systematically and without fail," Lenin was quoted as saying.

Indirect criticism

Judging by the quotations, selected, the more apposite of which were set in italics, there could be little doubt that the article was meant as a comment on the state of affairs in the Communist Party at present.

As Lenin and other members of the post-revolutionary leadership were presented in a favourable light, the butt of the attack did not seem to be the politburo leadership under General Secretary Yuri Andropov.

Instead, the target appeared to

Poll shows more support for British Conservatives

LONDON (R) — Britain's ruling Conservative Party has stretched its lead over the opposition Labour Party to 14 percentage points, according to an opinion poll published in the Guardian newspaper Saturday.

The Guardian/Marplan poll, conducted while Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher was visiting the Falkland Islands earlier this month, also showed that Mrs. Thatcher's personal popularity had soared.

Thirty-eight per cent of those questioned supported the Conservatives, up from 35 per cent in December. Labour's share fell one point to 24 per cent and the centrist Liberal/Social Democratic alliance's share slipped from 18 to 16 per cent.

Cairo refutes torture claims by Fundamentalists on trial

CAIRO (R) — Egyptian Minister of Interior Hassan-Abu-Basha has dismissed as unfounded torture claims made by Muslim Fundamentalists now on trial accused of attempting to overthrow the Egyptian government.

A state security court trying 280 followers of the militant Jihad (holy struggle) group decided earlier this month to refer 260 of them to medical examiners to investigate their torture claims.

In an interview published in the semi-official daily Al-Ahram, Mr. Abu-Basha said that the claims made by the defendants were baseless.

The previous article, which appeared on Nov. 20, eight days after Mr. Andropov became party chief, was presented under the same rubric of "reading Lenin anew" and also carried quotations from him without comment.

It cited Lenin as calling for a more open form of government, for more attention to be paid to the wishes and complaints of the public and for more honesty in naming the difficulties facing the country.

These have all quickly become hallmarks of the Andropov administration, which has published weekly reports on politburo sittings, assured the population it knew of shortages and also issued blunt statements about economic problems.

The close relationship between the quotations selected then and Mr. Andropov's own policies suggested that the article was also intended as an augury.

The bidding:
1NT West North East
1NT Pass 3NT Pass
Pass Pass
Opening lead: Two of ♣.

Bridge experts do not have to be masters of the occult to make their plays. There is usually a perfectly logical explanation for the things they do.

The auction needs little comment. South had a balanced 16 points and North a balanced 11, so both bids are textbook.

West led the two of spades. East won with the ace and returned the six. Declarer won and tried the diamond finesse. Showing exemplary technique, East allowed the jack of diamonds to win. Declarer returned to hand with the king of clubs and led another diamond. When West showed out, declarer took the ace of diamonds. He now needed four tricks from the club suit to fulfill his game.

After both players have followed to two rounds of a suit, there is a slight percentage edge to playing for a 3-3 break over a 4-2 distribution. Yet, declarer unhesitatingly returned to his hand with the queen of clubs, cashed his remaining high spade and led a club to the ten. When that held, he had his nine tricks. Lucky guess? No, just a matter of clear reasoning. West had led from a weak four-card and had shown up with a singleton diamond. Had he held a five-card suit, it is reasonable to suppose that he would have led from that suit rather than attack with a spade. The logical inference was that West did not have a five-card suit, and that his distribution, therefore, had to be 4-4-1-1.

This is really a simple exercise in counting. So much in bridge depends on no more than the ability to count to 13; whether to open the bidding; counting the distribution of a hand; or counting the distribution of a suit. I know of no bridge expert who considers 13 to be an unlucky number!
